Local Information:

Utah is a very geographically diverse state with the desert starting just west of the Salt Lake Valley and the Wasatch Mountains bordering to the east. A few hours north east of Salt Lake City is the Uinta Mountain Range. The Moab area and Zion National Park are within a 4-5 hour drive south east of Salt Lake City. As a result of this geographic diversity here in Utah, we see wildfires burn in a wide range of fuel types, exhibiting different fire behavior.

Approximately 1 million people live in the Salt Lake Valley and along the Wasatch Front. The cities of Ogden, Park City, Salt Lake City, Orem, and Provo are all within a 1-2 hour drive from the Lone Peak Conservation Center in Draper. Elevations in Northern Utah range from about 4,000 feet in the valley bottoms to over 11,000 feet in the mountains. Precipitation ranges from less than 15 inches to approximately 50 inches at the higher elevations. Utah is well known for the “Greatest Snow on Earth”, and as a result offers 9 world-class resorts within a 1.5 hour drive from downtown Salt Lake City. All of these resorts offer both summer and winter recreation opportunities. In addition to the resorts, the Wasatch Mountains offer a multitude of trailheads for use in all four seasons.
